Interacting with parliamentary committees

Public servants who are called on to interact with parliamentary committees often have many questions (and a few qualms):

- What are parliamentary committees and what are their powers?
- What is the process for answering questions or taking questions on notice?
- When do documents need to be produced to committees?
- When does the minister need to be consulted?

In this GLG, the presenters will answer these questions and will explain the issues to be aware of at each stage of the process.
